BMES 2026 — Engineers Empower Human Health

Mark your calendars for October 21–24, 2026, as we gather in Orlando, Florida, for the BMES Annual Meeting — the premier event for biomedical engineers and allied professionals shaping the future of healthcare.

This year's theme, "Engineers Empower Human Health," highlights the essential role of biomedical engineering in driving transformative discoveries and addressing the most pressing challenges in health and medicine. The meeting will showcase cutting-edge engineering innovation and translational research advancing next-generation therapeutics, medical devices, and integrative diagnostics that are redefining patient care and improving outcomes worldwide.

BMES 2026 will convene thousands of leaders across academia, industry, and government who are united by a shared mission: applying engineering principles to solve complex biological and medical problems. Biomedical engineers are at the forefront of innovation — from AI-enabled diagnostics and advanced biomaterials to regenerative medicine and precision therapeutics — empowering breakthroughs that transform how healthcare is delivered.

The BMES Annual Meeting fosters collaboration across disciplines, bringing together engineers, clinicians, research and teaching faculty, students, industry innovators, and government agencies including NIH and NSF. Attendees combine expertise across mechanical, electrical, and chemical engineering, materials science, computer science, mathematics, and human biology to accelerate scientific discovery and translate research into real-world solutions.

A core priority for 2026 is supporting the future of biomedical engineering. The meeting will provide meaningful opportunities for trainees and early-career professionals to connect, collaborate, and build relationships with leaders and organizations across the biomedical ecosystem — creating a vibrant environment for mentorship, recruitment, and innovation.

BMES attendees represent significant purchasing authority and actively invest in advanced research technologies, imaging systems, biomaterials, laboratory equipment, and emerging biomedical solutions. Nowhere else does science, technology, industry, and innovation converge as powerfully as at the BMES Annual Meeting.

We invite you to join this dynamic exchange of ideas in Orlando and position your organization at the forefront of innovation as engineers empower human health and shape the future of medicine.
